SUPPORTING BREAST CANCER CARE
in Northamptonshire

'From little acorns, great oaks grow'.

What started as a fun idea to raise a little amount of money for Kettering General Hospital – wearing crazy hats to raise more money – has certainly caught the imagination of the people across the whole county of Northamptonshire.

In just over 14 years, after an initial donation of £5 from an 86 year-old lady, over £2million has been raised.

As well as donating the majority of this amount to support all aspects of breast cancer care in the county, the charity now puts a lot of emphasis on supporting patients, their carers and their loved ones.

The Crazy Hats team is currently only able to do this for one morning a week, in very cramped conditions. With numbers attending the sessions soaring, the charity is now looking to provide bigger and better facilities – facilities they believe are richly deserved by those attending.

The dream is to create a 'haven' that is modern, has sufficient space, privacy, better resources and more people on board to support those attending and on a more regular basis. A new-build is their ultimate goal with local companies and the community investing in the project. It is a huge challenge but, with vision, it is 'do-able'. The idea of all workmen on site wearing pink safety hats is crazy but eye-catching, very apt and will certainly get the project noticed.

jhai and Crazy Hats: a perfect partnership

jhai Ltd was initially approached by Crazy Hats to see if it would provide the Building Control for their proposed New Build Project. However, jhai's marketing team saw an opportunity to go a step further and help with the charity's fundraising efforts for this huge endeavour. The company's branded pink safety helmets had always been a big hit at shows including Grand Designs Live and the National Homebuilding & Renovating Show, where they were given out free to visitors. Why not create a special Crazy Hats version and sell them, with all profits going to the charity's New Build Project? Pink hats, a building project, a Building Control company...it was meant to be!
